DEMOCRATS ARE WINNERS.

Indications at midnight pointed to a grand landslide to the democrats in the national election and to the fact that Woodrow Wilson would be the next president of the country. This was brought out in no uncertain manner by the early returns which were substantiated later in the evening. From all sources it was evident that the democrats had held fast together while the republican party had suffered from the split which was portended and the result is no more than was predicted. With the two factions of the republicans united the party would again have swept the country. Roosevelt was successful in carrying out his designs, the defeat of President Taft, and it was through no other cause than the admirable administration under President Taft which had been by the country being given over into the hands of the democrats.

It was not because the democratic candidates were so strong that the party was swept into office, but rather through the determination of the third party influence that Taft should not be returned to the White house, that we are to have four years of tariff for revenue only. The outlook is not cheering, but it is to be hoped that President Wilson will prove to be as safe, wise and business-like a president as the man he will succeed.

The state promises to be again under the guidance of Governor Baldwin with a legislature which promises to be well mixed. The congressional contest in this state points to a solid democratic representation. Whether the democrats or the republicans will claim the victory remains to be seen. While the former get the votes and the offices, the latter were important factors in giving it to them.

Locally, the election was like the country. The republican ticket was swept away by the defections. Judge Nelson J. Asling was the only republican elected and the vote he received should make it certain that the office of judge of probate should be taken out of politics. He is the man the office needs.

Now that the election is over, the country should settle down to the excitement in which the treasury department has been for the past six months and buckle in to get all the benefits possible from existing conditions. What the future has in store under Wilson will come soon enough. Responsibility rests only in one direction and it should be fully realized. It was intentional action, planned long in advance, and the result is the only reasonable outcome.

PARCELS POST SERVICE.

It is a burning job which the post office department has before it in the completing of the details and getting everything in readiness for the operation of the parcels post system the first of the year. This is a change which the people of this country are looking forward to with great deal of interest, and one which has great promise for the future. Estimates have recently been forwarded from the postoffice to the treasury department showing that an increased expenditure of $12,000,000 is contemplated for the coming year over last year. This will be caused by parcels post to the extent of $12,000,000 while the department expenses will be increased by $1,250,000 by the change in conditions under the new eight-hour law and extensions in the department. While the parcels post will start out as a seemingly expensive proposition, it is bound to be at least a self-sustaining proposition for the government and a great aid to the postoffice department. By efficient work of the administration, the postoffice department in the past year has been able to show a surplus. This will be continued and the fact that the increased operating cost is largely due to parcels post, which will be a revenue producer, seems excellent reason for the belief that it will be more than made up when returns from that source begin to roll in. Much can be expected from parcels post.

TRAFFIC ORDINANCES.

There are now in operation in this city the new ordinances governing the traffic in the central part of the city. It is something which the city has been in need of for a long time, and its coming is in line with similar action which has been taken in all cities where traffic gets to the point where congestion requires action. Norwich is not favored with wide streets. They were laid out too long ago. The result is that there comes a time when order is required in the use of the busy highways. The right side of the street has always been recognized as the proper path to travel, but failure to observe that by everyone makes confusion and makes traffic regulations necessary. It will require some time and an inclination on the part of the drivers of vehicles to co-operate in making the regulation a success. No one is more vitally interested in them than the man who drives a team or an auto. It should be his aim to give the authorities every assistance possible in requiring obedience to the regulations. Traffic should keep to the right, corners should be turned with care in mind and teams which have to be left for a brief time must be kept on the proper side of the road. The right attitude to the regulations by everyone will soon get strict observance and traffic will move as smoothly and orderly as in larger cities.

Time has fully demonstrated that whether it is a world's championship or the national election, it is usually the small boy who does the most bolder. He doesn't mind which side of the fence he is on as long as he gets a chance to make a noise.

The request of Turkey that the powers intervene and stop the war in which she is beaten, will not have to be issued a second time. Several will be only too anxious to get in on the profit sharing.

CANADIAN COAL DEPOSITS.

Canada is making efforts to develop all its natural resources, and in addition to getting the best out of the vast farming lands of the northwest, it has been brought to their attention that there are great coal fields awaiting development. This announcement at a time when the coal question is of such importance here and so much dependence is placed on the supply from the United States is of especial value to the neighbor to the north.

When J. Lawrence Hamilton, M. R. C. S., of Brighton, England, announced that the reason for his coming to Canada was with great surprise and unexpectedness to the Canadian people. Though there has been but a partial survey he roughly estimates that discoveries at the present time show that 175,000,000 tons are awaiting the coming of the miners. This is in all grades, with half a billion tons of anthracite, 74 billion tons of bituminous and the remainder of lignite and sub-bituminous. With this the supply of natural gas is also a big factor and its use for all purposes is now being made in some of the provinces. Mining on an extensive scale is presently in the coal regions in the near future.

It is quite evident that Canada is only just beginning to know the extent of its advantages and that it has great opportunities for making the most of nature's gifts. All of this is going to be of inestimable value to the industrial future of the upper half of the North American continent. Coal is a great national asset.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The farmers have their day. The 1-10-100-1000-10000 have the floor.

The price of meat has taken a tumble. Now for the eggs and coal.

The result is not what we all hoped for, but it might have been worse.

Happy thought for today: It is selfish interest that makes disappointment keenest.

Connecticut may be the last to recognize equal suffrage, but eventually it will have to do it.

The voice of the people may not always be right, but it is fair to say that it is usually honest.

Those who are in the soup are not drowned; they will make a new start from a savory standpoint.

The ins will do the best they know how, and the outs will soon recognize that it was all for the best.

The men who talked loudest have assumed their natural tone of voice. Events have silenced them.

How the outlook has changed now that the mists have rolled away. The whirl of agitation begets the senses.

How many different directions we pull to save the country! This is why it looks as if we were trying to sever it.

The army of straw-vote takers will now have a vacation until the next election. They had a mighty strenuous job.

The men who live by politics, and who want to create a great future when they get down to business—it pays them!

We may just as well congratulate the victors and wish them success. Good will beats dissension, everywhere, every time.

IDEAS OF A PLAIN MA'

Grown Up Children.

It is hard for people to understand the man who is but a grown up child. For there are men and women who cannot mature.

They cannot sink into the cramped form of what they are "supposed" to be. They have the child's love of doing the very thing that is not expected of them.

They have the child's intuitive, inexplicable, yet violent attractions and repulsions.

They have the child's utter absorption in the present. The past slips from them so easily. The future casts no shadow. It is all a strong, healthy, ideal at all, but just the outbreak of a childish passion for the present!

They have the child's naive, intense and often charming egotism. Though wrapped up in self, yet somehow their company is more cheerful than a two-conscious selfishness.

They have the child's love of play, and entire willingness that others should work and support them.

If they like you, there is something about their love that seems sweeter than if it were earned by a rational love as children love—just because.

They have the child's delight in movement, color and tone moments. At last! how the ways of deepest darkness in the city streets are sown with little child-hearts, in women that could never realize!

They have the child's love of fancy and aversion to fact. They ask not for shadow. What they say is, "Tell us a story."

When we meet these eternal children we should not blame them, for that is so easy to do and so cheap and cruel, but we should mother them and father them, if so be we have more staidness.

For perhaps He who loved the little children may have for these unrippened souls some tenderer judgment than for us.

And then, perhaps, it is we that— but of course it isn't.

Man the Weaker Vessel.

Instead of being physically the weaker vessel, I think that the woman is stronger than the man.

Little girl, unless hindered by man's, are as fond of outdoor exercise and bodily sports as are boys. Left alone, the average girl is a tomboy.

The lines of a healthy woman's body, when matured, are stronger than male lines. Look at the pillar firmness of the legs, the suppleness of the waist and the breadth and power of the chest, shoulders and arms of the woman athlete; how much more impression of panther-power they give you than does the monstrous massiveness of the male giant.

Among savage tribes, in a state of nature, while yet instincts had not been corrupted by the pride of thought,

THE BULLETIN'S SHORT STORY.

COMING INTO THE BUSINESS

"It's a shame," said Miss Pearl Patterson to the stenographer, "from across the hall, that Mr. Pye should have his disposition all ruffled up as it is by Willyum."

"Who's Willyum? Why, he is Mr. Augustus Fare-you-well Willyum Pye, Jr., that's who he is! The office force call him Bill, because that's the last name for him any living soul would pick out just by looking at him! Merely glancing at him as you passed him in a crowd, you'd know the man in his vest pocket had a name a mile long on 'em, a sort of padded out name, calculated to impress the innocent bystander with the fact that he was an important person, even if he didn't look it. You know the kind."

"During Bill's last year in college we all knew that he was going to step into the office the next fall and sort of cast his eye over us and perhaps take full control of the business and ease things a bit for father. Mr. Pye kept telling us all about it. 'Willyum,' he said, 'I tell you, it is going to be a relief to have that boy take the burden off my shoulders and give the old man a little breathing spell! I've worked hard all my life and now I'm going to play the part of a simpleton and let that Willyum take a head on him!'

"We were all awfully impressed."

"One day an advertisement of Hufmann's Latest Thing in Correct Clothes for Young Men came to life and blew through the office. He said he had seen through the office boy and the reflection from his polished nails blazed me so that I hit a capital L instead of a W."

"I've simply got to go, dad," said Augustus, "it's a social obligation, and you don't understand!"

"The Pikers have the biggest country house at the lake!"

"So that was Willyum. The old man went over to the cashier and had him peel off a hundred or so for Bill, who then floated out."

"It was weeks later when he came into the office to work. At last, Mr. Pye announced that his son Willyum was going to start in. He made a great fuss over a brand new mahogany desk and a waste basket and some fixings in a secluded corner. The waste basket was a great convenience to Bill. He used it for his cigarette ash and the placid violet notes that came in the mail and by messenger. He always was the stigmatized—the notes you so fine you couldn't read 'em to save your life."

"The day that he noticed I was on earth I had forbidden him. He felt the sort you forget easily. I felt a woman did all the hard work; men only hunted and fought."

Women bear children; the male is never subjected to any so great a strain.

Women teach school, especially the lower grades. No occupation has yet been discovered so wearing on the nerves as school teaching. The average male teacher quits simply because he is not physically up to it.

Women can endure more drudgery than men. A man says he wouldn't stay home all day and do housework with a lot of children under his feet. As a matter of fact, he couldn't.

There are many more women who excel in masculine occupations than men. I think there are more men led astray and ruined by women than there are women lured to wrong by men.

Man has monopolized all the easy tasks, the lazy holdings, he is priest, judge, senator, anything where one has only to stand and talk or sit and look dignified.
